

UNIVERSITÀ
DEGLI STUDI DI MILANO-BICOCCA

COURSE SYLLABUS

Society and Health II

1819-2-H4102D013-H4102D037M

Aims

At the end of the course, participants will have:

- An understanding of the Health care systems and the role of the different players involved;
- An understanding of the main determinants of population health and main risk factors of disease;
- An understanding of the epidemiological research methods for the analysis of these determinants and risk factors;

An understanding of the main strategies for promotion and prevention of public health.

Contents

Detailed program

The course will include:

- Introduction to the concept of health and the systems created to provide health care to the population.
- Introduction to determinants of and inequalities in population health and risk factors of disease;

- Epidemiological basis for assessing the determinants of and inequalities in population health and risk factors of disease.

Promotion and prevention of public health, using examples from health behavior change, screening, vaccination, etc.

Prerequisites

NONE

Teaching form

Lectures and combined individual/group work will be conducted to address the aim of the course.

Textbook and teaching resource

Handouts and selected paper from international peer-reviewed journal

Semester

FIRST TERM

Assessment method

Esame scritto: domande a risposta multipla

Office hours

ON APPOINTMENT
