SYLLABUS DEL CORSO

Social Change, New Social Risks and Social Innovation in Europe (blended)

2021-1-F8701N079

Learning objectives

The course aims at providing the basic conceptual knowledge, skills and data analysis expertise for the comparative analysis of European societies.

Contents

Comparative analyses of transformation trends in European societies with particular attention to welfare, immigrants, family, work and social policies.

Detailed program

The course focus on the meanings of diversity and changes in work and the provision of welfare services to be explored with special attention to the interconnections between these two areas. Comparative analysis focuses on female employment, immigration, youth employment policies, unemployment, poverty and welfare, implementation of care services and social policies. Moreover, the comparison shall take in particular consideration the trends of convergence or the persistence of differences and divisions in European societies.

More in details, the programme is made by the following modules:

- The comparative approach. Europe and European countries

- The main lines of contemporary social change
- Welfare transformations: new risks and social innovation
- Employment, unemployment and work policies
- Welfare regimes and local experiences of innovation
- Demographic changes, the family and social policies
- Inequalities, poverty and welfare redistribution policies
- Immigration and refugees: migration and integration models

Prerequisites
