Should the COVID emergency persist, the lessons are provided remotely asynchronously, with events in synchronous videoconferencing, otherwise in attendance.

If the online mode were to remain: the first part of the course (anatomy, physiology, pathophysiology) is difficult to understand; therefore remote lessons are unsuitable because the teacher cannot perceive the level of understanding of the learners and on the basis of this vary the exposure.

The other parts of the course are more notional and distance learning is more acceptable.

To reduce the impact of the absence of lectures, a self-assessment program, based on quizzes, is added to the teaching material; incorrect answers are commented out and the right answer is illustrated.

Furthermore, at the end of the course it is possible to contact the teacher
