SYLLABUS DEL CORSO

Comunicazione, Negoziazione e Nuovi Media

2122-1-F8701N075

Learning objectives

The course guides students in exploring the main conceptual and methodological tools of sociology of media and communication, and in applying them to the analysis of socio-cultural changes in contemporary society.

Contents

The course has three parts. The first discusses the main theories in the field of sociology of media and communication. The second part focuses on the relation between media and everyday life. The third part focuses on cultural representations and the negotiation of meanings in the process of communication.

Specific attention is given to gender, class, age/generation, racialization and ethnic/cultural differences as key dimensions for the sociological analysis of media contents and communication processes.

Detailed program

The structure of the course entails three parts:

1) Introduction to sociology of media and communication. Critical overview of the debates in the field and discussion of the main concepts and theories guiding the sociological analysis of contemporary communication processes. This part will include a discussion of interpersonal and mediated communication, mass media, digital media, among other topics.

2) Media and everyday life. Focus on issues related to (unequal) access to, and the use of, media and communication technologies, as well as to their intergration into people's everyday lives (particularly in relation to youth, women and racialized subjects). Changes in terms of identity construction, social relations, knowledge construction and distribution, reproduction and resistance to gender-based violence, and forms of civic-political participation will be discussed.

3) Cultural representations and negotiation of meaning. Focus on the processes of construction, negotiation and contestation of cultural meanings associated to media and communication contents. Special attention will be given to the construction and contestation of gender, cultural, class differences and to racialization processes.

In each part there will be presentations and discussion of theoretical texts as well as of empirical case studies, research examples and media and audio-visual materials.

Prerequisites

Learning disposition; written and oral communication skills; comprehension of academic texts (in Italian and English); understanding of the teaching language (Italian) for attending students.

Teaching methods

Academic year 2021-22: attendance in presence. The possibility to attend classes remotely (synchronous classes on Webex) is open only for those who are unable to attend in person.

Frontal lectures; presentations and discussion of readings and case studies; seminars with invited experts. Students are invited to actively contribute with critical questions and comments to the classroom discussion.

Assessment methods

Attending students: Presentation of one article to the class + written exam

Non attending students: written exam
