Course title

Human resource management

Topics and course structure

Human resource management processes are crucial for companies operating in the most competitive sectors, as well as in Public Management (e.g. local authorities, social-health services and public utilities) and in the third sector (e.g. NGOs). There is _____ Prospective business and professional training experts have a more specific interest in HR competencies: in their work (in companies or as consultants) they usually have to interact mainly with colleagues in the HR department, both to organize new training projects and/or to support other activities (for example, in the on boarding process).

This course aims to develop an advanced knowledge on HRM processes and activities. The introductory part deals in particular with the analysis of value creation and its interplay with the management of human capital. In the central part the main HR tools are deeply examined: personnel planning, recruitment, selection, on boarding, evaluation, reward management, development, career and labor relations. Finally, in the last part we consider how to effectively design the HR department.

Objectives

At the end of the course students will have to demonstrate that they possess the necessary operational skills to: carry out the mapping of critical skills for organizational roles (job profiling); build skills inventories; design selection processes with appropriate assessment tools; assess competency gaps and define hedging strategies; design training interventions and human capital development strategies; set up compensation policies.
