COURSE SYLLABUS

Anthropology of Media

2223-3-E2001R028

Course title

Mediascapes. Images, practices and cultural anthropology

Topics and course structure

The course analyses the relationships between culture and media in a number of domains including: cinema, photography, ethnographic film, TV programs, video art and internet. The focus will be on (1) problems in representation of cultural diversity through media; (2) the development of media in Western societies and non-Western communities; (3) the social and cultural formations shaped by old and new media practices.
Particular attention will be paid to (1) the social and cultural dynamics of the representation of suffering; (2) the active use of small media within contexts of social insecurity; (3) cultural mediation enacted by media (used by both the anthropologist and his/her informants) during ethnographic research.

Objectives

Knowledge and understanding - Solid basic knowledge of the themes and problems of media anthropology through a comparative analysis of contemporary societies and culture.

Ability to relate different knowledge and models: ability to relate knowledge referring to different cultural and temporal contexts; ability to compare theoretical paradigms, interpretative models, and ethnographic practices of media anthropology.

Applied knowledge and understanding - The knowledge will be acquired through the analysis of specific case studies drawn from ethnographic films and books, and through connections with the personal experiences of the students.

Communication skills and making judgements will be increased through problem solving strategies, and collective discussions about theoretical and practical issues, requiring the students to take a stand.

Methodologies

Lectures and discussion; interactive use of powerpoint, video, and internet.
