Course title

INTERCULTURAL PEDAGOGY

Power systems, widespread “cultures” and dominant models

Topics and course structure

The course aims to introduce students to the general themes of education and pedagogy, with particular attention to the challenges posed by cultural pluralism.

Through the intercultural approach, students will be invited to reflect on topics of educational and communicative interest: cultural diversity and identity, the encounter/clash with otherness, the classification of reality and the formation of stereotypes, prejudices, differences and inequalities, racisms, pedagogical and intercultural competences to be developed.

In particular:

The widespread educational climate will be analysed, paying particular attention to the issues of informal education and the role of communication, the possibilities of developing pedagogical and intercultural competences, also as communicators.

Pedagogical reflections will be developed on the narratives that characterise a complex and multicultural society, highlighting the educational relapses of communication and how the intercultural approach can contribute to the construction of a democratic society.
