Contents

The enterprise is a central institution of modern economic development: an institution that acts dynamically and is able with its strategic choices not only to overcome the constraints imposed by technology and the market, but to contribute directly to their transformation. The course aims to investigate its origin, transformations and behaviors in a historical perspective and with a strongly comparative approach. It starts from some conceptual insights, necessary to focus on the essential problematic nodes in the field of entrepreneurs and businesses, then focuses on the main feedback between business and context, to then move on to the international comparison of models, types and times of the evolution of the company: in particular, the changes in the size, shapes and performance of companies will be analyzed in particular, changes in the size, shapes and performance of companies will be analyzed, then the management and governance of the company. Final insights will be dedicated to three themes in order to better reveal the nature of companies: corporate welfare, the form of the "group" as a prevalent type in the Italian experience and the role of the brand in distinguishing the company in competitive markets.
