Current practices of preservation and enhancement of tangible and intangible ethnographic heritage. The case of the Museum of Cultures in Milan
Through a visit to the museum, the collections in storage and the archives, we will discuss the most current issues in ethnographic heritage studies. We will exemplify museum strategy and practices adopted to address issues such as the sustainability of museums today and the relationship with the public and relevant stakeholders. We will also reflect on the importance of heritage biography, issues of provenance and ethics of collecting.

Conservation of value and its transmission: corporate museums
Presentation of corporate museums as places for the conservation and communication of intangible heritage. Visit to the Campari Museum.
The enterprise in its historical determination, sediments a distinct culture. Its preservation makes it possible to grasp the complex interactions between a set of material goods, consisting of objects and documents, and their immaterial links. Corporate museums allow the dual purpose of learning the value of its preservation, and often its very determination, with the need to communicate it. Distinct institutions will therefore be visited and studied, such as the Pirelli Foundation and the Campari Museum, as concrete experiences aimed at preserving, understanding and communicating an intangible heritage of vital importance for the entire socio-cultural context.

Mobility and Heritage. Ethnographic research and applied experiences in Mediterranean urban and rural regions
Migrations play an important role in heritage-making processes, although political rethorics often represent mobility as a "dissonant" element that disrupts the "natural" nexus of community, culture and territory, In this seminar, we examine various ethnographic researches carried out in Mediterranean islands that show how cultural diversity has been a powerful factor in the transformation of local intangible heritage. Furthermore, we analyse how applied anthropology can foster intercultural projects that promote intangible heritage as a tool for social cohesion through the active involvement of migrants and refugees
Wednesday 19 April 2023 2:00-6:00 pm (4hrs) prof.ssa Federica Tarabusi (M-DEA/01 11/A5)
Challenges and opportunities of collaborative research with local institutions
By examining some case studies, critical and reflective tools will be provided about the challenges and opportunities of collaborative research, understood as a process aimed at facilitating the co-production of knowledge and methodologies that involve representations, practices, languages developed by multiple institutional and organizational actors, differently positioned within the local arenas.
