Outdoor education: ecological perspectives and practices

2223-BbetweenSDG-04-02

Module description

The unit aims to present the main theoretical and methodological elements of the large field of experience that is attributed to outdoor education, discussing and focusing it progressively in the light of foundations and approaches proper to an ecological perspective. In this direction, the unit discusses the motivations, opportunities and forms of an educational proposal that, in declining also in outdoor contexts, supports an ecological awareness and thereby fosters sustainable behaviors. To this purpose, in the unit, useful experiences, modalities and issues are introduced and analyzed in order to understand in particular outdoor education in its most recent declinations and possibilities in educational services and schools.

Learning goals

The unit aims to promote knowledge of the field of experience identified as outdoor education, its international and national origins and interpretations, its motivations, the main theories of reference, possible methodological approaches, and the most recent experiences in educational services and schools, so as to support the ability to recognize and foster educational and training proposals from an ecological perspective.

General goal

The overall goal of the unit is to introduce so-called outdoor education from an ecological perspective.
