---

Title

From development economics to the economy of the globalized World.

Teacher(s)

Giulio Mellinato

Language

Italian

Short description

The economy of the world we are living in is possible only thanks to a dense network of interrelationships and interdependencies, defining not only the patterns and directions of international trade, but also the hierarchical relationships between different parts of the world, the conditions of access to resources and their use. Economists have long wondered about the evolution of such global relations, first focusing on the most favorable conditions for economic development, and later analyzing the increasing complexity of global relations. This course will present the main stages of theoretical elaboration, comparing them with some particularly representative cases of virtuous integration, or failed globalization.
