Title

Educating for Sustainability: economy, natural resources, and population in the long run

Teacher(s)

Giulio Ongaro

Language

Italian

Short description

The course aims at showing laboratories of active learning for adolescent students focused on the relationship between demographic dynamics and natural resources in the long run, and the relevance and use of some natural resources in the history of humanity. It will show that starting from various types of primary sources it is possible to create educational courses and laboratory activities aimed at transmitting to the students the complexity of the concept of sustainability and the problems related to the exploitation of natural resources, especially in terms of access to them and of the environmental and economic consequences of their management.
