The clinical internship is a training strategy that involves the support of the student to an experienced professional in specific health and social-health contexts in order to learn the skills required by the professional role.

The skills to be developed are the same for the three-year period, with increasing complexity for each year of course, in relation to the progressive acquisition of theoretical knowledge, their intersection with laboratories professional, the ability to deal with specific situations encountered in internship and the ability of the student to make recursive links between knowledge and experience.

The clinical internship aims to:

- Developing professional skills: the internship facilitates processes of elaboration and integration of knowledge, knowledge with experience, in the light of the specific skills defined by the regulations on the exercise professional.
- Promote the application of nursing knowledge and ethical principles in situations assistance provided by the educational project and, consequently, act in relation to the responsibilities required by the educational level.
- Developing professional identity and belonging: the internship promotes role awareness, in addition allows to appreciate values, acquire skills and behaviors for the development of the ethical-ethical dimension related to the nursing profession.
- Encouraging early socialization at work: through the internship the student comes into contact with organizational contexts and begins to know the relational, functional-organizational dimensions, in the services.

Contents

The main activity of students during the internship requires primarily learning knowledge and not only technical capacity, therefore the activities they learn and are entrusted with must have an educational value and training in close connection with the internship objectives. Students in these contexts must be encouraged to be active learners.

Through the experience in a protected environment, the student comes into contact with the main nursing techniques learned during the hours of frontal teaching required according to the level of training.
