SYLLABUS DEL CORSO

Diritto Ecclesiastico Comparato

2526-5-A5810224

Learning objectives

The course aims to equip participants with the necessary tools to interpret the evolving challenges related to freedom of thought, conscience, and religion in contemporary societies. This includes critically evaluating the diverse approaches taken by legal systems.

Contents

In the modern era, there is an increasing prominence of supranational rights and the global circulation of state legal models. This course aims to delve into legislative decisions and judicial approaches adopted by European countries and certain non-European nations, focusing on the complex issues surrounding freedom of thought, conscience, and religion in contemporary societies.

Detailed program

The course explores the models of church and state relationships between states and religious denominations across European and selected non-European countries.
It examines the rights of individual and collective religious freedom, alongside the principle of secularism in its diverse jurisdictios.
Topics include religion and attire, the right to proselytize and issues of religious radicalization, conscientious objection in reproductive rights, employment rights within ideological organizations, religion-related hate speech, female genital mutilation, religion and gender equality, religious freedom and animal rights.
The analysis focuses on specific jurisprudential cases from both national and supranational jurisdictions.
