Learning objectives

Premise:

Advertising influences a brand's image more than any other communication tool. For this reason, advertising messages for tourist destinations—as well as for hospitality services—are predominantly linked to consumers' classic needs: dreams and wants. The "dream" of a vacation in highly desirable locations is linked to the "need" to dedicate some of one's time away from work and everyday routine.

The objectives of the laboratory are the following:

1. (Knowledge and Understanding) provide the tools for understanding the advertising processes that lead to the choice of a tourist destination.
2. (Applying Knowledge and Understanding) correctly interpret advertising messages conveyed by the media and evaluate their communicative effectiveness.
3. (Making judgments) at the end of the laboratory the students will have developed a critical ability to formulate an accurate judgment of the quality of the campaigns intended for the promotion of tourist destinations.
4. (Communication Skills) students will be able to present their projects in public both individually and in groups, using typical terms from the advertising world.
5. (Learning Skills) the laboratory stimulates the desire to delve deeper into the various components that characterize advertising, in particular with regard to the strategic and creative aspects.

Detailed program

What is a brand? This is the first question that needs to be answered, as tourist destinations (nations, regions, individual locations) should be considered brands.

How do you distinguish good tourism advertising that engages recipients from poor advertising that has little or no ability to create a desire to visit a particular destination?

The advertising process: from the creative strategy (creative brief) to the development of creative proposals.

Group work: students, divided into groups of four, will develop several advertising campaign projects to promote tourism.
