Cross-Cultural Management and Communication

2526-2-F6302N048

Learning objectives

Knowledge and understanding

The main objective of the Cross Cultural management course is to allow students to deeply understand what it takes to “take perspective” of a different cultural viewpoint.

applying knowledge and understanding

Another objective of the course is to have students analyze communication situations with the provided tools of observation, allowing them to exercise intercultural competence within an operational context.

Making Judgements

The student will be able to develop critical and informed autonomy in understanding and managing intercultural communication dynamics, evaluating situations of cultural complexity and conflict. They will apply theoretical and practical models of intercultural analysis to formulate effective ethical and strategic decisions in multicultural organizational contexts, taking into account values, communication styles, and ethical implications.

Communication Skills

The student will acquire advanced communication skills to effectively interact in multicultural and organizational contexts, adopting strategies that facilitate inclusion, intercultural negotiation, and conflict resolution. They will be able to adjust their communication style according to the cultural specificities of interlocutors, presenting ideas and projects with clarity and cultural sensitivity.

Learning skills

The tools provided during the course provide an excellent foundation for building a thoughtful experience of intercultural encounters and diversity management in organizations throughout a professional career.

Contents

The Intercultural Communication course will provide students with basic concepts of intercultural communication and some tools of communication analysis in order to make people aware of their cultural context, a necessary step to positively relate to other cultures with intercultural competence. Discussion and application of the tools through case studies and exercises will offer a deeper knowledge of intercultural communication theories, practices and problems relative to the specificity of intercultural research within the domain of profit and not for profit organization, health and educational contexts. In the second part of the course attention will be given to some essential themes of negotiation dealing both with face to face interactions and with remote working of teams. Diversity and Inclusion will be a transversal theme of the entire course.

Detailed program

The course will tackle most well known models and theories of intercultural communication developed by scholars from different backgrounds and nationalities who have consolidated their careers mostly in Northern Europe and in North America. The adopted epistemological perspective of the course is a constructivist one. In order to become aware of one's own culture/s, students will learn to recognize communication styles, assumptions and values, conflict and perceptual styles. Individuals will learn to learn about and from other cultures through a subjective perspective highlighted by this approach. Different models of analysis and problem solving in complex multicultural situations will be presented and discussed with students. Particular attention will be given to communication in the context of health behaviors in local development contexts, the role of change agents, of private/public dynamics, and the ethical implications of decision-making in intercultural situations. An important topic of the course is also the history and current perspectives on diversity, equity and inclusion actions and programs, aiming to prepare Mages professionals to add competence in managing cultural diversity to their profile.

Prerequisites

Students are expected to be familiar with basic sociological concepts about culture and to speak International English.

Teaching methods

Teaching methods are very interactive and see the direct involvement of students in exercises and group discussions completing theoretical presentations. For this reason, participation and attendance to classes is very important and encouraged.

Teaching consists of a lecture part consisting of lectures and seminar activities on specific topics to the extent of 50%; the remaining 50% is developed as interactive teaching.

Around 10% of the classes will involve remote lessons and individual readings with sessions of Q/A and tests.

Class exercises include:

- facilitations on how to create third virtual cultures (i.e. team building processes)
- intentional creation of sensitivity experience for individuals and organizations (with examples from corporate training)
- Ideation of new interventions for inclusion (project work)
- re-engineering of services for the promotion of diversity (exercises of organizational development)

Assessment methods

The exam will be an oral interview. Attending students will have the opportunity to have intermediate assessments. The course slides are to be considered as additional material to support the work done in the classroom with the lecturer.

The reading of the texts is essential for taking the exam.

Class participation is considered to be a positive and important factor for a successful result. Classes are usually highly international thus providing the perfect intercultural lab.
