Course title

Communication Psychology

Topics and course structure

The course introduces the key concepts and research topics in communication psychology. Communication is meant as a process of joint participation and sharing of meanings, generated by different systems (verbal and nonverbal), regulated by communicative intention and playing a fundamental role in the definition of personal relationships.

More in detail, the course will focus on the following topics:

- Human communication: theoretical models and definitions
- Communication and meaning: approaches to semantics
- Intention and communication
- Nonverbal communication: relationship between verbal and nonverbal behavior, systems, functions
- Discourse and conversation: discourse organization, characteristics of conversation, methods of discourse and conversation analysis
- Miscommunication: definition, irony, seduction, deception, pathological communication
- Communication and new media
- Psychology of personal branding

Objectives

Through this course, with regular and active participation in the lessons and proposed activities, the following learning outcomes are promoted in terms of:

Acquisition of the theoretical foundations of communication psychology

Understanding methods for analyzing interpersonal communication

Ability to apply knowledge and models in various practical contexts

Below are the specific learning objectives, in terms of both knowledge and understanding of key concepts in the field, and the ability to apply them in real-life situations.

Knowledge and Understanding

Students will acquire solid and systematic knowledge of the basic psychological processes underlying human communication, with particular attention to the complexity of verbal and non-verbal meaning systems.

Applying Knowledge and Understanding

Students will learn to use the concepts and topics covered to analyze interpersonal communication processes. They will also be encouraged to apply these skills to different real-life settings (family, friendships, professional environments).

Regarding independent judgment, the course encourages students to formulate their own opinions independently and to argue them effectively, with the aim of refining their interpretive models of communicative processes.

The development of communication skills is a central educational goal of the course and is pursued through a series of practical exercises designed to enhance participants' awareness and ability to regulate their own communication styles.

Learning ability is fostered through active participation in lectures, completion of practical exercises, and attendance at seminars.

Methodologies

The course combines frontal teaching (lectures and discussion supported also by Powerpoint slides) with interactive activities, including:

Analyses of video sequences

Practical communication tasks

Simulations and role-playing

Production of video and multimedia materials

All the lessons will be face-to-face in the classroom, with this schedule:

10 lessons of 3 hours of frontal teaching

4 lessons of 3 hours of interactive activities

5 lessons of 3 hours with a first phase of frontal teaching, followed by interactive activities.

Online and offline teaching materials

Powerpoint slides downloadable online
