Course title

Contemporary Chinese Culture

Topics and course structure

The course explores various dynamics of contemporary Chinese culture in the global context, with particular attention to its most prominent features in international diffusion. The teaching is structured into two modules.

MODULE A: Emerging Aesthetics and Soft Power: Consumer Culture in Contemporary China

Lesson 1 - Consumption, Imagery, and Symbolic Power

In the first lesson, we will focus on the spread of contemporary Chinese aesthetic sensibility, which reinterprets traditional cultural elements through current visual and stylistic languages, helping to redefine what is perceived as "cool" globally. We will analyze emerging trends in the world of fashion, design, and lifestyle, and reflect on how these manifestations become vehicles of cultural recognition and identity affirmation in the international context.

Lesson 2 - Aesthetics of Innovation and Technological Imagery

In the second lesson, we will explore the construction of a future imaginary "made in China," through the increasingly central role of technology and innovation in cultural processes. We will investigate products, environments, and narratives that illustrate how China is proposing its own vision of the future – technological, urban, and creative – capable of influencing global discourse. We will also reflect on the ways in which this vision translates into instruments of soft power and cultural positioning.

MODULE B: Chinese Literature and Transmediality - A Global Success Phenomenon

This module analyzes the Chinese interpretation of two literary genres that have recently captured a vast international audience: science fiction and Boys' Love. Through the presentation of some emblematic cases, we will see how new technologies and the transmedial approach have renewed traditional Chinese narrative, allowing it to establish itself as a cultural product of global relevance (not unlike what has already occurred with American blockbusters, Japanese manga and anime, and Korean K-pop), while also offering a contemporary reinterpretation of themes and archetypes from the Chinese fantastic tradition.

Objectives

Module A aims to offer a critical understanding of contemporary Chinese culture through the analysis of consumption, emerging aesthetics, and soft power strategies. Visual languages and neologisms of mainstream culture will be explored to capture the transformations taking place in Chinese identity and its global projection. The objective is to provide students with tools to interpret consumption as a cultural expression and to refine their skills in intercultural and visual analysis.

Module B aims to promote a better understanding of Chinese culture, particularly in its most contemporary aspects related to pop culture, in order to comprehend its success factors and its connection with new technologies. This will enable students to effectively apply knowledge about new media learned in other courses to the Chinese context.
