COURSE SYLLABUS

Introduction To Public Law

2627-1-E1806M002

Learning objectives

The "Public Law Institutions" course is part of the three-year degree course "Marketing, Corporate Communication and Global Markets" (Ecomark). In this context, the course aims to provide students with public law notions useful for understanding the Italian and supranational institutional framework within which the competitive orientation and activity of Italian companies develop. The culture of competition, in particular, is addressed - taking into account the current globalization of the markets - in the light of the Italian constitutional and the legal principles of the European Union, and in the broader framework of the mechanisms underlying the Italian form of State and government and the fundamental rights guaranteed in the related context.

Contents

The course of "Institutions of Public Law" is structured around the study of institutions, freedoms and related national (and supranational) protection systems which outline the context in which Italian companies establish themselves and carry out their activities.

Detailed program

Notions of general public law and Italian constitutional history.
The sources of Italian public law and European Union law.
The institutional organization of the Italian Republic; the fundamental features of the institutional organization of the European Union (in particular: Italy's participation in the European Union).
The rights and duties of citizens, in particular: the so-called Italian "Economic Constitution" in light of the of the EU Treaties' principle of competition.

Prerequisites

None

Teaching methods

The professor will carry out many lessons in which he or she will begin with a first part in which the concepts characterizing the course will be exposed (delivery mode), and then begin an interaction with the students which will define the second part of the lesson (interactive mode).

Assessment methods

The final exams consist in
a) oral interviews based on the topics covered during the course;
b) or written tests consisting in open questions carried out on an ongoing basis (along the period in which the lessons are provided).
In both cases, the Examination Commission will evaluate the level of knowledge acquired by the students regarding the topics of "Institutions of Public Law", focusing on the educational objectives that the course aims to pursue.
